linsey skirt and kerchief which made up the costume of a farmer's daughter in the days of the Revolution.

She is not beautiful; ah no!
Care, perhaps that disease, consumption, which makes the heart grow cold to name, has been busy with that young face, sharpened its outlines and stamped it with a deadly paleness.

There is no bloom on that young cheek. The brown hair is laid plainly aside from her pale brow. Then teil me what is it you see when you gaze in her face? Consisting of Plain and Fancy Cloths. Cassimeres and Vestings, for Men's and Boys' Wear, which I am prepared to Make up to Order in the most Fashion-You look at that young girl and see nothing but the gleam of two large dark eyes that burn into your soul. Ladies', Misses and Children's Yes, those eyes are unnaturally large and dark and bright; perhaps consumption is feeding their flame.

And now, then, as the father sits there so moody and sullen, or the daughter sits yonder so sad and silent and pale, tell me, I pray you, the story of their lives.

of their lives.

That farmer, Jacob Manheim, was a peaceful, happy man, before the Revolution. Since the war he has become drunken and idle; driven his wife broken hearted to the grave, and, worse than all, joined a band of Tory refused. gees, who scour the land at dead of night, burning and murdering as they

To night, at the hour of two, this Tory band will lie in wait in a neigh-boring pass, to attack and murder the rebel Washington, whose starving sol-diers are yonder in the huts of Valley

Forge.
Washington, on his lonely journeys, is wont to pass this farm house; the cut-throats are there in the next chamber, drinking and feasting as they wait for two o'clock at night.

And the daughter Mary—for her name was Mary; they loved that name in the good old times—what is the story of her orief young life?

She had been reared by her mother, now dead and gone home, to revere this man Washington, who to-night will be attacked and murdered; to revere him next to God. Nay, more, that mother, on her death bed, joined the han s of this daught r, in solemn betrothal, with the hands of a young partisan leader, Henry Williams, who now shares the crust and the cold at Valley Force. Valley Forge.

Well may that maiden's eye flash with unnatural brightness, well may her pale face gather a single burning flush in the centre of each cheek.

For yesterday afternoon, she went four miles over roads of ice and snow, to tell Captain Williams the plot of the refugees. She did not reach Valley Forge until Washington had left on one of his lonely journeys; so this night, at twelve, the partisan captain will occupy the rocks above the neigh-boring pass to trap the trappers of George Washington.

Yes, that pale, slender girl, remembering the words of her dying mother, had broken through her obedience to her father, after a long and bitter struggle. How dark that struggle in a faithful daughter's heart! She had betrayed his plot to his enemies, stipulating first for the life and safety of her traitor father. traitor father.

And now, as father and child are sit-ting there, the shouts of the tory refu-gees echo from the next chamber; as the hand of the old clock is on the hour of eleven; hark, there is a sound of horses' hoors without the farm house; there is a pause; the door opens; a tall stranger wrapped in a thick cloak white as snow enters, advances to the fire, and in brief words solicits some refreshments and an hour's re-

getting some food for the traveler, rush getting some food for the traveler, rush wildly litto the next room where his brother tories are feasting.

Tell me, why does that young girl stand trembling before the tall stranger, rolling her eyes from that caim face, with its blue eyes and kindly smite?

Ah, if we may believe the legends of that time face, was not for the stranger. Sing that song as they sangit then--"Peace on earth, good will towards men."

of that time, few men, few warriors, who dared the terrors of battle with a smile, could stand unabashed before the solema presence of Washington.

For it was Washington, exhausted with a long journey, his limbs stiffened and his face numbed with cold; it was the great rebel of Valley Forge, who, returning to camp sooner than his usual hour, was forced by the storm to take refuge in the farmer's house, and claim a little food and an hours' repose at his hands.

In a few moments, behold the soldier with his cloak thrown off sitting at the oak-n table, partaking of the food spread out there by the hands of the girl who now stands trembling at his Hidden away there in a deep glen, not many miles from Valley Forge, a quaint old farm house rose darkly over And look! Her hand is extended as if to grasp him by the arm; her lips move as if to warn him of his danger, but make no sound. Why all this signs across for the man who sits so a wide waste of snow.

It was a cold, dark winter, and the snow began to fall, while from the broad fire-place of the old farm house the cheerful blaze of massive logs flashed around a wide and spacious lent agony for the man who sits so

One moment ago, as the girl in preparing the hasty supper, opened you-der closet adjoining the next room, she Two persons sat there by the fire, a father and child. The father, who sits yender, with a soldier's belt thrown over his farmer's dress, is a man of some fifty years, his eyes blood-shot, his hair changed to an untimely gray, his face wrinkled and holtowed by care, and by dissipation more than care.

And the daughter, who sits, in the heard the low whispers of her father and the tories; she heard the dice-box rattle as they were casting lots who should stab George Washington in his sleep.

And now the words, "Beware, on this night you die !"tremble, half formed upon her lips, when the father comes hastily from the room and husbes her

And the daughter, who sits in the full light of the blaze opposite her father—a sienderly formed girl of some seventeen years, clad in the coarse linsey skirt and kerchief which made "Show the gentl man to his cham-ber, Mary" (how calmly polite a mur-derer can be); "that chamber at the head of the stairs on the left. On the left, you mind?"

Mary takes the light, trembling and pale. She leads the soldier up the oaken stairs. They stand on the landing, in this wing of the farm house, composed of two rooms, divided by thick walls from the main body of the mansion. On one side, the right, is the door of Mary's chamber; on the other, the left, the chamber of the soldler, a chamber of death to him.

of death to him.

For a moment Mary stands there trembling and confused. Washington gazes upon that pale girl with a look of surprise. Look I She is about to warn him of his dauger, when, see there! her father's rough face appears above the head of the stairs.

"Mary, show the gentleman into the chamber on the left. And look ye, girl, it's late; you'd better go into your own room and go to sleep."

While the tory watches them from the head of the stairs, Washington energy in the left Mary the

An hour passes. Still the storm beats on the roof; still the snow drifts on the hills. Before the fire in the dim old half of that farm house are seven half-drunken men, with that tail tory, Jacob Manheim, sitting in their midst, the murderer's knife in his hands. For the jot had fallen on him. He is to go up stairs and stab the sleeping man. Even this half-drunken murderer is pile at the thought. How the knife trembies in his hand—trembies against the pistol-barrel! The jeers of his comrades rouse him to the work; the light in one hand, the knife in the other, he goes up stairs; he listens, first at the door of the soldier's chamber on the All is still; then he places the light on the floor; he enters the cham-ber on the left; he is gone a moment; slience! there is a faint groan. He comes forth again, rushes down the stairs, and stands there before the fire, with the bloody knife in his hands.

"Lo k!" he shrieks, as he scatters
the red drops over his comrades' faces, over the hearth, into the fire. "Look; it is his bland, the traitor Washington. It is his blood, the traitor Washington."
His comrades gather around him with ye'ls of Joy. Already, in fancy, they count the gold which will be theirs for this deed, when lo! that stair door opens, and there, without a wound, stands George Washington, asking for his horse.

"What!" shricked the tory Man-heim, "can neither steel nor builets larm you? Are you a living man? Is there no wound about your uniform?"

The apparition drives him mad.

He starts forward. He places his hands tremblingly upon the arms, the breast of Washington. Then he looks at the bloody knife still clasped in his right hand, and stands there quivering as with a season. as with a spasm.

While Washington looks on in silent wender, the door is flung open, the bold troopers from Valley Forge throng the room, with the galant torm and bronzed visage of Captain Williams in their midst. At this moment the clock struck twelve. Then a horrid thought crashes like a flunderbott upon the brain of the tory Manheim. He seizes the light—rushes to the room of his daughter on the right. Some one had just risen from the bed—the chamber was vacant. Then toward the room on the Look! now the light quivers in his hand. He pauses at the door; he listens. Not a sound—a stillness like the grave. His blood curdles in his veins. Gathering courage, he pushes open the door. Toward the bed through whose curtains he struck so blindly a few moments ago. Again he pauses. Not a sound, stillness more terrible than Why does the tory Manheim start aghast at the sight of the stranger's blue and gold uniform. Then mumbling something to his daughter about the grave. He flugs aside the curtain.

There, in the full light of the lamp, her young form but half covered, bathed in her own blood-there lay his daughin her own blood—there lay his daughter Mary.

And do not look upon the face of the father as he starts silently back, frozen to stone; but in this pause of horror listen to the mystery of this deed.

After the father had gone down stairs an hour ago, Mary silently stole from the chamber on the right, her soul shaken by a thousand fears. She opened the door on the left, and beheld Washington sitting by a table, on which were spread a chart and a Biole. Then, though her existence was in the Then, though her existence was in the act, she asked him, in a tone of calm politeness, to enter the room on the right. Mary entered the chamber which he left.

Can you imagine the agony of that girl's soul, as, lying on the bed intended for the death conen of Washington, she silently awaited the knife, although that knife might be elenched in a father's hand. And now that father, frozen to stone, stood there, holding the light in one hand, the other still clenching the red There lay his child, the blood stream-to her, but that was all he could say.

Suddenly she seemed to wake from that stupor. She sat up in the bed with glassy eyes. The strong hand of death was upon her. As she sat there, erect and ghastly, the room was thronged with soldlers. Her lover rushed forward and called her by name.
No answer. Called again—spoke to her in that familiar tone of olden time; still to answer. She knew him not. still to answer. She knew him not. Yes, it was true, the strong hand of death was upon her.

"Has he escaped?" she said, in that husky voice.

"Yes!" shricked the father. "Live,

"Yes!" shricked the father. "Live, Mary, only live and to-morrow I will join the camp at Valley Forge."

Then that girl, that hero-woman, dying as she was, not so much from the wound in her arm as from the agony which had broken the last chord of life, spread forth her arms as though, she beheld a form floating there above the bed, beckening her away. She spread forth her arms as if to inclose that angel form.

"Mother!" she whispered, while there grouped the soldlers—there, with a speechiess agony on his brow, stood the lover—there, hiding his face with the lover—there, boding his face with one hand, while the other grasped the light, crouched the father—the light flashing over the dark bed, with the form in its center—"Mother, thank God! For my life I have saved him—" Look! Even as sarting on that bloody couch there she speaks the half-formed word, her arms stiffen, her eyes wide open, set in death, giare in her father's face.

Whitfield and the Thunder Storm.

On one occasion Mr. Whitfield was preaching in Boston on the wonders of creation, providence and redemption, lightning came on. In the midst of the sermon it attained to so alarming a height that the congregation sat in almost breathless awe. The preacher closed his note book, and, stepping into one of the wings of his desk, fell on his knees, and, with much feeling and fine taste, repeated?

"Hark! the Eternal r-nds the sky!
A mighty voice before iffin goes—
A voice of music to fits friends.
But threatening thander to dis foes.
Come. children, to your Father's arms;
Hide in the chambers of my grace.
"Till the flerce stormbe overblown,
And my revenging fury cease"
"Let us devoutly sing, to the prais and glory of God this hymn—'Old Hundred."

The whole congregation instantic

The whole congregation instantly rose and poured forth the sacred song, in which they were nobly accompanied by the organ, in a style of pious grandear and heartfelt devotion that was probably never surpassed. By the time the hymn was finished the starm was hushed, and the sun bursting forth, showed through the windows to the enraptured assembly a magnificent and brilliant arch of peace.

The preacher resumed the desk and his discourse with this apposite quota-

"Look upon the rainbow; praise Him that made it. Very beautiful it is in the brightness thereof. It com-passeth the heaven about with a giorious circle, and the hands of the Most High have blended it."

The benediction with which the good man dismissed the flock was universally received with streaming eyes and hearts overflowing with tenderness and gratitude.

-Any one who vists Childeweld, England, can read in the cometery the

"Here lies me and my three daughters, Brought here by using Selcilite waters, If we had stock to Epsons salts, We wouldn't have been in these here vaults."

-Jones don't see the use of militia.
"What," he tawied out, "is better to disprise a crowd than a policeus ""
"A yelier backed wasp," shricked an urchiu is the street.
